Leadership Profile

Three decades of impactful and diverse academic experiences, including teaching at a small private liberal arts college, an HBCU, and large R1s in the US borderlands. Recipient of multiple awards for teaching, research, outreach, and diversity. Well-regarded human rights scholar and teacher, invited for 30+ public talks, nationally and globally, since 2019.

I am an “outside the box” thinker and problem solver with a broad vision for human rights, social justice, and global education. I have extensive experience shaping compelling common visions and building diverse coalitions inclusive of faculty, students, staff, and community members. Consensus-builder and frequent matchmaker between diverse constituents. Broad and in-depth experience with the nuts and bolts of twenty-first century academia, including educational technology, assessment, fundraising, grant writing, curriculum development, hiring, faculty and staff evaluation, and promotion and tenure.

Highly entrepreneurial with experience raising millions of dollars in funds for social justice projects as well as extensive experience monitoring and stretching limited budgets. Hard-working and respectfully persistent, I am a collaborative and empathetic leader devoted to shared governance and transparency, and skilled at bringing the best out of people and finding ways for everyone to contribute to the success of a project. I am a dedicated mentor to students, faculty, staff, and community members, as well as a proud mentee of so many academics and community members.

Key Leadership Roles

Founding Director, Human Rights Practice Program, 2017-Present: In our seventh year, we have taught approximately 220 students from around the globe, with over 150 graduates. More than 70 program faculty from 11 different colleges across the University as well as two very prestigious international advisory boards totaling 17 members. We routinely work with dozens of NGOs and grassroots activists in more than 20 countries. Cutting-edge pedagogy (see Simmons 2019) and curriculum based on video-conference guest lectures and working with community members through the online format with on-the-ground, real-world projects. We have had over 700 video guest lectures from more than 60 countries. We recently launched the first fully online BA in Human Rights in the US, and three new graduate certificates – all of them the first of their kind (gender-based violence, human rights and technology, and human rights and documentary media). We have signed MOUs with eight international universities (in Kyrgyzstan, Russia, Ghana, Bangladesh, Thailand, Italy, India) to develop joint degree programs and other initiatives. We are creating regional graduate certificates such as Human Rights in Eurasia, Human Rights in the Middle East, and Human Rights in Central Asia. These will include existing courses and workshops run by community members along with courses from international universities and our program.

Special Consultant to the Dean, Global Campus, San Diego State University, 2021-2022:

Chiefly served as a liaison between the Global Campus and academic programs on the main campus. I worked with the Dean to develop a sustainable organizational structure for the academic side of SDSU GC that included the responsibilities for a new associate dean of academic affairs for Global Campus. Provided an academic perspective on marketing analyses and budget models, recognizing that traditional market data and budget formulas are useful but incomplete for mapping opportunities, student interest, and potential collaborations. Nurtured interdisciplinary faculty teams from across the university willing to collaborate to develop innovative online programs, including exploring reward structures to make participation in Global Campus more enticing for faculty, department chairs, and deans.

President of the Board of Directors, Lost Boys Center for Leadership Development, 2014-2024: Overseeing one of the largest organizations working with the Lost Boys from South Sudan, we have successfully changed our mission twice to address evolving community needs and dealt with numerous fundraising challenges. Currently we are centering an invaluable archive of 17,000 testimonies gathered 30 years ago while the Lost Boys were in refugee camps in East Africa. We are raising funds, connecting individuals to their testimonial records, building an educational center in Juba, South Sudan, and developing a remembrance project to promote peace in South Sudan. In the past two years we graduated our first two cohorts of local women who completed our sewing class. They have since set up a sewing shop with the equipment that we provided.

Founding Director, MA in Social Justice and Human Rights, 2007-2011: This program was based on an innovative learner-centered curriculum that emphasized team-taught, problem-based, and community-embedded seminars as well as student internships, and the infusion of virtual lectures via videoconferencing from around the world. The curriculum brought university expertise to real-world community problems and created engaged interdisciplinary research teams of faculty, students, and community members. With almost no development infrastructure, I raised over $400,000 from community members for student scholarships.

President, President-Elect, and Past President, Academic Senate, Arizona State

University, 2004-2006: Led the West Campus Senate during one of the most chaotic and politically charged moments for higher education in state history, as President Crow built the “New American University.” I successfully rallied students, faculty, staff, and community members around a common vision of what our campus should be. I gained support for that vision from the Arizona State Legislature, the Governor’s office, and the Arizona Board of Regents, as well as community leaders and faculty and students across the state.
